Million$ are available for energy- and demand-saving projects in the Consolidated Edison service territory.

The New York State electric grid has become increasingly strained during high-demand periods due to an increase in electrical demand, especially in the New York metropolitan area. The New York State Energy Research and Development Authority (NYSERDA) and Consolidated Edison have developed programs for New York City businesses to ensure a reliable supply of electricity. Together we can keep the power flowing.

The program offers approximately $224 million for demand management projects to companies that receive electric service from Consolidated Edison. Find out how this first-of-its-kind collaborative program can earn you thousands of dollars in incentives and save you thousands more in energy and demand usage. For information on available time-sensitive, energy-efficiency and demand response programs, visit www.nyserda.org/programs or call 1-866-NYSERDA.
